Kevin,

It doesn't seem as though you understand my previous request during our conversation earlier this afternoon for a retraction of the previous press release.

First, this new press release (and the previous release that preceded it) violates the preliminary injunction order. Mayder is prohibited from "directly or indirectly marketing" the STS product. Both press releases clearly constitute marketing.

Second, this "correction" does not state anywhere that the previous release is retracted. We have demanded a full retraction and will accept nothing less.

Third, Verigy sought a preliminary injunction by this motion, not a permanent injunction. This "correction" incorrectly represents the relief sought.

Fourth, at best, this "correction" is misleading, and potentially actionable as trade libel and/or defamation.

If the full retraction does not occur (and, once again, neither this nor any other "correction" will be sufficient), Verigy will have no choice but to seek relief from the Court.

Verigy hereby gives notice that it intends to seek a temporary restraining order regarding this issue if a retraction does not occur. Verigy also intends to seek sanctions for contempt for violating the preliminary injunction order.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter.

Mindy,

UPDATE: US Court Denies Injunction Sought by Verigy

SAN JOSE, Calif.--(PR-USA)--Verigy (NASDAQ:VRGY - News), a spinoff of Agilent Technologies (NYSE: A), on February 29, 2008, was denied its request to permanently prohibit defendants Romi Omar Mayder, Wesley Mayder, Silicon Test Systems, Inc. and Silicon Test Solutions, LLC (STS) from bringing STS products to the Automated Test Market (ATE) market.

Instead, the Court granted a limited injunction, prohibiting STS from marketing or selling its products for five (5) months. The prohibition expires on July 29, 2008. The Court held that a limited injunction was proper because Mr. Mayder, STS's founder and CEO, received a "head start" by beginning work on his new venture while still employed at Verigy. The Court reasoned that a non-permanent, temporary, limited injunction was appropriate because "there is publicly-available information regarding implementation of fan-out technology and the fact that STS's products are directed toward different customer requirements" than Verigy.

Specifically the US court found that Romi Mayder could have developed STS products without the "benefit of Verigy trade secrets by referring to publicly available references regarding fan-out technology and collecting and integrating STS customer requirements." Silicon Test Systems highly values its intellectual property, and is very pleased with the court's decision. The public version of the order is available at <http://www.ecf.cand.uscourts.gov/>.

Mindy,

The preliminary injunction restrains STS from marketing and selling Flash Enhancer. I believe that the language below is proper and does not constitute marketing of the Flash Enhancer product. The language below merely quotes from the Court's Order.

You state that the language is misleading, and potentially actionable as trade libel and/or defamation. Can you explain why you feel it constitutes trade libel (e.g. I know of no factually false statements.)? Similarly, can you explain why you feel it could constitute defamation? (my last review of defamation required that a publication be damaging to Plaintiffs reputation and that it be false. Can you please point out the statement you feel is false?)
